The history of Uxmal is uncertain but most of the buildings date from the 7th to the 10th Centuries AD, when Uxmal dominated the region. The real function of many of these structures is unknown. Unlike most Yucatán sites, Uxmal has no cenotes and water was collected in man-made cisterns. The scarcity of water may explain the number of depictions of the rain god Chaac on the buildings. Highlights include the Governors Palace, actually three buildings linked by Maya arches, built during the 9th and 10th Centuries AD; The Nunnery Quadrangle, so named because the Spanish thought that the 74 small rooms set around a central courtyard resembled the cells of a nunnery; and The Magician’s Pyramid, the tallest and most striking structure at Uxmal, begun in the 6th century AD. The date of the first settlement in the older, southern part of the site is uncertain, but the northern section was built during a renaissance in the 11th Century AD. In its heyday as a commercial, religious and military centre, which lasted until about the 13th Century, Chichén Itzá supported over 35,000 people. The ruins were built with such knowledge of cosmology and mathematics that astound scholars from around the world. Deadly games were held in the magnificent Ball Court to choose sacrificial victims for the altar-throne that was in the form of a red jaguar encrusted with jade, and their remains displayed in the gruesome Temple of Skulls. This ball court is the largest to be found in Mesoamerica. After lunch you will travel to your hotel in Cancún. Dinner and overnight stay.
